

TURKISH WOMAN DESERTS FAITH

Mme. Sidky Bey to Take Active Part in Capital Society.

The wife of Sidky Bey, who has been appointed first secretary of the new Turkish legation by Mundi Bey, probably will take an active part in social affairs of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington the coming season.

She is a Turkish woman, but has forsaken the religion of Mohammed and taken up the faith of the Christians. If Sidky Bey and his chief, Mundi Bey, are representative of the "Young Turks," the leaders of the rehabilitated Turkey, the wife of the first secretary is representative of the progressive woman of the Ottoman empire. She is cultured and highly educated, and can speak four languages fluently.

The wife of Mehmed Ali Bey, the deposed minister, always remained in seclusion, as do all Moslem women. She wore the traditional veil when in the presence of men and met none outside her own household.

Long ago the opaque veil ceased to be a part of the wardrobe of the wife of Sidky Bey, for when she ceased to be a follower of the great prophet of the Moslems, she put it aside as a thing of past ages and became a radical in dress in Turkey.

Her husband has served as second secretary of the legation and assistant consul general at New York for many years. They have spent most of their time in New York, coming to Washington only at rare intervals.

WHAT THE FALL BRIDE SHOULD BUY

If she buys it ready made she should avoid the counters where it is made of coarse muslin, unevenly stitched with coarse thread and trimmed with a profusion of cheap lace and embroidery that will see its end after the first visit to the tub.

Better far the choice of garments that depend on sheerness and fine sewing for the price.

If she would get a good pattern for combination garments, the three-piece variety which includes corset cover, drawers, and short petticoat, she would save a good deal of work and get a good deal of effect.

If not these, then she should surely make all her pieces by patterns that eliminate fulness around the waist and ugly drawing strings. These are entirely out of date and spoil any fashionable costume they are worn under.

If she cannot afford much lace she will be surprised to find how pretty ordinary cotton footings is for underlinen.

For her top petticoats she can get striped sateen for everyday wear and thin muslin for best to which she can attach by buttons a deep fancy ruffle of lace and embroidery or one of taffeta. The latter is a good idea, as it gives one the effect of a silk petticoat at small expense. The muslin foundation does not begin to wear out like silk, does, and it can be always sent to the tub to get a starched freshness.

Dainty House Gowns.

If there is one year in a girl's life in which she wants to look her best in her room and house it is the first year she is married.

For that time she wants all manner of dainty frocks and wrappers. These she can make at home, or, better still, buy at small prices during the August sales.

This is one class of clothes that it is economy to pick up now. Little princess gowns of colored muslin or ballets, jumper suits of foulard in the fashionable colors that only require a yoke and sleeves of good lace to convert them into smart little house gowns, dotted Swiss frocks that may be put over colored linings of silk mull—all these are to be had for a small outlay of the trousseau money.

They will serve all winter, not only for one's own house, but for all manner of small social occasions. If a prospective bride can afford it she should have at least one low-necked princess slip of taffeta. It is not necessary to get dress silk to make this. The lesser quality, called lining taffeta, serves well.

If this is properly made, well boned and finished with a little lace and a beading of ribbon at the top, it can be used constantly as a lining for every other unlined frock.

For evenings when she does not wish to put on a boned frock she should have an empire tea gown made of inexpensive fabric. It must be finished with a wrapper. There are dozens of 25-cent fabrics on the counters now that can be used for such a tea gown.

All the gauzes, cotton chifons, silky cotton voiles, and even the dotted silk mulls are used. There must be a lining and the tea gown must fasten down the back to give it an "air."

It can be cut out in a Dutch neck and the unlined sleeves, made close to the arm, may be cut off above the elbow, although the wrinkled mousquetaire is prettier on any but a rounded, well-shaped arm.

The method of placing a large soft girle around the figure under the arms is very effective. It is finished at the back in an upright bow with two long ends.

A ribbon may be worn in the hair to match this girl, and if one wants to be especially artistic the stockings and slippers may also match.

Shoes, Stockings, and Gloves.

A prospective bride can put all the money she wishes in good stockings and gloves, for these she can wear until the last thread is left. As to shoes, she should be chary of buying at this season of the year, because the autumn styles change even as you look at them from October until Thanksgiving.

The American woman is very particular about the fashion of her shoes. She is anxious not to be out of date. All kinds of good-looking foot gear are designed for her whims, and it is rarely true that the output of one season matches that of another.

The bride can buy russet pumps, which she will always need; suede slippers for the house, and a pair of patent leather half shoes on dress occasions, but she had better stop there, even if her money hasn't given out.

There are all manner of promises being made for novelties in the way of shoes next winter, and she will hate to be in a position of only looking at them and not possessing them.—Exchange.

FOR SPANISH CHILDREN.

Directly after Lent there is observed in Spain a custom that is particularly interesting to children. It is what may be termed the sale of the lambs, for on Monday morning after Easter the shepherds have their lambs and goats on sale in all the cities. The animals are kept in temporary pens, and it is the rule for parents to permit their children of from five to twelve years of age to purchase a pet lamb or goat. After the animal is selected it is taken to the home residence and given the freedom of the courtyard, and quite often the greater part of the house. It is every child's ambition to train the pet so that it will at least follow its owner like a dog, and if a few simple tricks are added to the lamb or kid's education the master or mistress is proud, indeed. Girls especially delight in these pets, and often the animals are so bedecked with bows and ribbons as almost to hide their bodies. The sale of the lambs is a very old custom, and is supposed to have originated through some form of the church.

The boardwalk at Atlantic City was a picture, thronged as it was with girls in closely fitted suits, the keynote of which was simplicity. Nothing about the suits bulged, the skirts swung from narrow hips in swaying, curling lines about thin ankles incased in thin stockings which harmonized in color with some note of the hat or suit.

Among them, one girl especially was noticeable. Her suit was decidedly plain and of dark blue serge. It did not appear to have even the customary seams, while the crowning touch of simplicity was the girlish sailor collar of the material, unlined to make a closer fit around the shoulders.

Beneath the collar went a soft handkerchief of heavy blue muslin with its pointed sailor ends hanging from the large loose knot.

The hat was a rough blue straw, large and sweeping, and around the crown was knotted another scarf of the blue silk.

ATTRACTIVE SUMMER COSTUME

The whole effect was that of a tall slim thing who had grown like a flower into a dark blue calyx.

Such a suit need not be hard to make, yet it will be especially distinctive of the new fall styles.

Let it be of dark colored panama, trimmed down the front with two rows of braided buttons, one on either side of the edge of the coat, these two rows to continue down the seam in the center of the gored skirt.

Another stunning suit whose material is of black and white striped serge may be trimmed with small pointed bias bands of the material in place of the braid, and the buttons may be of pearl, or molds covered with the dress material. For a more expensive costume and one particularly English in effect, select one of the tweeds, for instance, in brown and black, and trim with heavy braid encircling the brown bone buttons.
